

And of how
so recently
it was every thing.
And to the ways
the cold weather
gave me like.

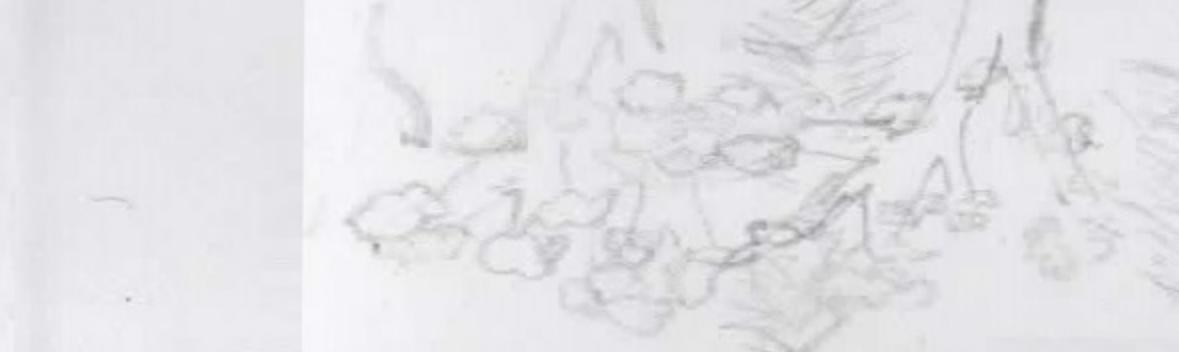

To the feeling of what

To a sunrise,
hard-fought, the most beautiful I'd ever seen, that I swore I'd never forget.

And
that I can know I saw,
and I can almost remember.
But that I can't see or feel like it was,
even if my memories
were as vivid as my eyes can tell.

Up and trudged
the water, and bundled
through the ice
but now it's like someone else lived through except you're gone.
And to how I do it again,
that I'll never get back.
took time walking to you you wouldn't last, and I carried around, because I knew how you made me turn my picnic shelves in woodland blossoms by a campfire

to the lovely cherry

And to the knowledge that these traces of feelings will grow
ever fainter
even fainter
than I can grasp at now.

And
to the ever-pressing
-need - urge-
to find more
to love
and
to lose.

Leave Me

Beautiful
To All The

To the feeling
on a first date
with someone new.
And the second date,
and the third,
and to your first
flat together.

How the fourteenth
kiss made you feel,
and to how it will never be quite the same, even if you want it to be.

When I feel
the pull

left that

A beautiful thing

to become

And finally to how my insatiable
thirst

for novelty
and its ephemerality
and its heartbreak

leaves others
as heartbroken as I
